Pacific Partnership Agreement

The TPPA is a free trade and investment treaty being negotiated between New Zealand and 10 other countries on the Asia-Pacific rim, including the United States. The agreement is being designed by and for the interests of US big business, which wants to rewrite our laws for their benefit. The TPPA would also give foreign investors the power to sue the government in secretive international tribunals if they claim that changes in law or policy have caused a substantial loss to their New Zealand investments.
